China can afford to repay "all the debt owed to the Soviet Union" for arms used against U.S. Forces, in a war fought to prevent a North Korean invasion of South Korea. Over 33,000 U.S. troops were killed and over 100,000 were wounded during that three-year conflict, yet China refuses to repay its infrastructural and development loans obtained from European and U.S. citizens.

"Thanks to the fact that the whole Party and people had concentrated on carrying out the correct principle of economic readjustment since the winter of 1960, socialist construction gradually flourished again. The Party and the people were united in sharing weal and woe. They overcame difficulties at home, stood up to the pressure of the Soviet leading clique and repaid all the debts owed to the Soviet Union, which were chiefly incurred through purchasing Soviet arms during the movement to resist U. S. aggression and aid Korea."
